

TRINITY HALL

IRISH PUB & WHISKEY HOUSE

LIST O' DRAMS

Every effort is made to list only whiskies in stock,
however guests keep drinking them,
so occasionally we may sell out of an expression.

Notes on Tasting

Slow Down & Enjoy the full experience

Trinity Hall serves all orders of neat whiskey through spirit aerators to enhance aromas and improve guests' capture of tastes & flavor of their chosen dram!

Tasting a new expression should include these steps

1st 80% of taste is sensed by the nose, Breathe It

2nd Crack the Whiskey! Open it with a drop of water

3rd Rest & linger a while, savor the after-tastes

Except on flights, prices are shown in Blue before a Brand or Expression, and Age Statements are shown in Black following the whiskey listed

In describing the individual tastes & flavors associated with a specific distillery, known as their "style" we look back to when the process began sometimes hundreds of years ago, and the ingredients that were available to that distiller in that village or town. As a result, the flavors you taste are generally reflective of the climate, environment and activities that were popular in that place.

Regionally, distillery styles are similar because they work from the same ingredient sources, and the original tradesmen were learning by working in the same area using similar technique, materials and a goal to offer an improved version of what was already successful!

In collating our collection, you will find groupings by Region on a page, then listed in an order from Bright & Fruity (low impact from wood or smoke) at the top of the page to Robust & Hearty (rich cask, wood or smoked flavors) Price is not always the best indicator of a style or taste because taste is subjective to a state of mind, preferences and the time of day!

Irish Whiskies

A range of triple distilled malts & blended whiskies that can be generally described as bright, floral & fruity with little to no smoke in most, but not all, present in some! List starts with the light goes through the richest flavors.

Irish whiskies were the most popular import to the USA prior to Prohibition, after repeal the Irish were not as quick at regaining their market share due to a little embargo issue... which allowed Scotch to become the dominant style in the new age!
Irish Potstill is a mash bill recipe description indicating the use of malted AND un-malted barley together, and Irish Blends may contain malted & un-malted barley and other grain whiskies.

Highland Malts

The most concentrated region of producers, offering similar styles, with unique differences achieved either through still work or cask maturation. Majority of these malts have sweeter finishes, light smoke or peat, and Speyside is a sub-region within the Scottish highlands, and is within the valley of the Spey river.

Islands & Islay

Island whiskies were made by fishermen, & those that lived by the sea, its the most recognizable style with many, but not all, offering smoke, peat reek, salt, brine, and seashore scents overlaying the whisky fruit notes.

While all of these expressions have pronounced smoke notes, some have more peat in the nose (P), we noted those that have the mellowing effect of Sherry cask finishes, which reduces some of the most odiferous aromas. (S indicates Marsala cask)

* Some expressions do not offer age statements

America & Beyond

What is different about whiskies from America or Asia and those from Scotland or Ireland? There are fewer because Irish & Scots started distilling centuries earlier!
